3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

FBI SAYS UNLOCKING METHOD WON'T WORK ON NEWER IPHONES

The Federal Bureau of Investigation's secret method for unlocking the iPhone 5c used by one of the San Bernardino shooters will not work on newer models, FBI Director James Comey said. "We have a tool that works on a narrow slice of phones," Comey said at a conference on encryption and surveillance at Kenyon University in Ohio. Apple's shares were down 1.3 percent at midday. Comey added that the technique would not work on the iPhone 5s and the later models iPhone 6 and 6s. The iPhone 5c model was introduced in 2013 and has since been discontinued by Apple. REUTERS

US SENATORS VOTE TO BOLSTER TRAVEL SECURITY IN FAA BILL

The Senate voted to bolster travel security in the wake of the Brussels attacks with measures that include doubling the number of transportation security teams with bomb-sniffing dogs at domestic airports and other transit hubs. Lawmakers voted overwhelmingly to add security measures to a separate bill that calls for renewing the programs of the Federal Aviation Administration through September 2017. The FAA bill is expected to come up for a final vote later this month. After Republicans and Democrats reached a deal on security measures earlier in the day, lawmakers voted to raise the number of Visible Intermodal Prevention Response, or VIPER, teams within the Transportation Security Administration from 31 to 60. CHARLIE SHEEN UNDER INVESTIGATION BY LAPD 'THREAT' DETECTIVES

Detectives from the Los Angeles Police Department's "threat management" squad have opened a criminal investigation of actor Charlie Sheen, a police spokesman said on Wednesday. Police disclosed little else about the investigation, which the LAPD spokesman, officer Mike Lopez, said began with a complaint lodged against the actor on March 31. Lopez declined to provide any information about the nature of the alleged victim or threat, but said investigators had obtained a search warrant in the case, and that as of Wednesday afternoon had yet to contact Sheen. Unconfirmed reports from media outlets, including Variety and RadarOnline.com, referred to an audio tape they said was at the center of the investigation. A lawyer for Sheen could not immediately be reached for comment. REUTERS

How a tweet ousted a billboard denying genocide in one day

The outrage machine could have started anywhere, but it started with a tweet.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

After outrage quickly spread online, a billboard in Boston from a group denying the Armenian genocide had a remarkably short run this week.

It appeared in the North End Tuesday night. By mid-morning Thursday the billboard's owner, Clear Channel Outdoor, peeled it away and replaced it with an Ad Council spot promoting adoption.

It featured the words "Truth = Peace" and a link to the site FactCheck Armenia.com and the statement: "Proudly paid for by the Turkic platform, Istanbul."

Clear Channel spokesman Jason King later said the ad had been "placed there in error."

A Twitter firestorm about the ad could have started anywhere, but it started with Somerville's Elizabeth Weinbloom.

"Horrific billboard in Boston's North End, denying the Armenian Genocide. @marty_walsh, do something," she tweeted around 1 p.m. Wednesday.

Her tweets about the ad were retweeted more than 100 times and spurred many others to pepper Mayor Marty Walsh, MassDOT and Clear Channel with calls to action. There was also a widely circulated petition.

Weinbloom, a one-time candidate for Board of Aldermen, said in an interview she couldn't believe how quickly it all happened.

"I guess I've never had the privilege to experience social media being so incredibly effective at correcting an injustice," she said. "Once they got 200 tweets at them, they backtracked" — referring to the billboard-owning company.

She said she never saw the billboard in person. The picture she shared came from the Facebook page of a friend, North End resident Jeremy Koo. Most of the extensive barrage of tweets that followed happened from her seat on a bus bound for New York, Weinbloom said.

"I was almost concerned that maybe it had never been there," she said. "I said, 'You definitely saw that billboard yourself last night, right?'"

The billboard JEREMY KOO

Koo said in an email that he spotted the ad on his way home via Government Center. From a distance, he said, he assumed it was some kind of call for global unity. Realizing it wasn't was "infuriating," he said. So he snapped a picture.

Weinbloom was especially sensitive to the issue, she said, and especially tuned into the ad's coded messaging — or "dog whistles" as she called them.

As it happens, she spent time last year traveling in Turkey and studying the Turkish government's opposition to the genocide designation.

"That is a billboard that is 100 percent meant to be seen and understood by Armenians and Turks exclusively," she said.

The U.S. is among many countries that do not recognize the killing of hundreds of thousands of Armenians in the early 20th Century as genocide — although 43 states, including Massachusetts, do.

The ad was not far from Boston's Armenian Heritage Park and Holocaust Memorial. And its placement came just after a visit from Armenian President Serzh Sargsyan and before an annual Walk Against Genocide in the area.

This being Twitter, when Weinbloom's message caught on, she braced for hate-filled responses. There were some, but not many. Some read her last name and fired off anti-Semitic comments or confronted her about Israeli policy. Most sent encouraging words.

Among them, she got this message from a friend: "Only use your powers for good."

Boston schools receive grant for financial literacy classes

The award from Discover Financial Services will fund programs reaching 6,000 students in the city.

Boston Public Schools will receive a nearly $180,000 grant to cover the cost of a new financial education program in the school district, school officials said.

The award, offered by Discover Financial Services, will fund a program reaching 6,000 students across 30 public high schools in the city.

The group has awarded nearly $10 million over the past five years to fund similarly programs in nearly 1,000 schools and districts throughout the country, officials said.

As a result of those grants "many" of those schools witnessed an improvement of nearly two letter grades on financial literacy test scores.

"In order for our students to be successful after they graduate they will need to know how to navigate the financial landscape they will encounter in their everyday experiences," Superintendent Tommy Chang said in a statement. "This grant will provide our students with a course on financial literacy that will go a long way toward helping them gain the skills necessary for their adult lives."

One injured, gunman dead in Cambridge shooting

A Cambridge office complex shooting left one person injured before the gunman reportedly committed suicide in the parking lot.

The office of health care company Senior Whole Health at Charles and Third streets was the scene of the shooting, which occurred around 7:46 a.m. Thursday, CBS4 Boston reported. Cambridge police stated that a former employee returned to the office complex and opened fire outside a building.

The gunman stood in the parking lot and shot several times, witnesses and police told the Boston Globe, which added that one man inside the cluster of buildings sustained nonlife-threatening injuries and was taken for treatment at Mount Auburn Hospital.

> "It was a former employee who did shoot at a co-worker."
> Warnick

The shooter was identified as a 70-year-old man from Framingham, Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan's office reported in a statement.

"It was a former employee who did shoot at a co-worker," Cambridge Police spokesman Jeremy Warnick said to the Globe.

The shooter had been waiting for the victim, a 58-year-old Cambridge man, to arrive, CBS Boston reported, adding that the suspect committed suicide in the incident.

Authorities on the scene had recovered body armor near where the shooting took place as they continued their investigation in the parking lot, according to the Globe.

The area was temporarily closed to traffic because of the ongoing investigation, DA Ryan's office reported. JASON NUCKOLLS

MBTA SERVICE CUTS

MBTA official cites budget gap

The MBTA, which recently voted to raise fares and made significant headway on its structural deficit this year, could look to service cuts in fiscal 2017 when it tries to bridge the remainder of its projected $80 million gap, a top T official said Thursday.

The transportation authority is counting on approval of a $187 million appropriation from state lawmakers this spring to fill the fiscal 2017 budget hole and increase spending on maintenance projects.

Further reducing the structural deficit could involve service cuts, MBTA Acting Chief Financial Officer Michael Abramo said at a meeting of the MBTA Advisory Board on Thursday.

The meeting centered around the roughly $2 billion annual budget given initial approval by the MBTA Fiscal and Management Control Board.

"We're funding to keep the service uncut for the next year, although technically the financial control board could cut them to save money," said Robert Guttman, Beverly's representative to the advisory board, hoping to have his statement confirmed.

"I would say we're reviewing all services," Abramo responded. "On paper it's funded for the next year, but the financial control board is reserving judgement on whether to cut midyear," Guttman replied.

"Yes," said Abramo. "And part of that would be to address that $80 million."

Deficit reduction in fiscal 2016 has been driven in large part by holding the line on overtime and other spending, while extended-hours service on the weekends was cut earlier this year.

"The T had been historically increasing expenses by about 5 percent a year with revenue growth of like 1.6," Abramo said.

Expenditure growth over the first several months of fiscal 2016 has been basically flat, and the projected fiscal 2017 deficit fell from $242 million to $80 million. SHNS

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Sanders and Clinton trade barbs over who's qualified to be president

Bernie Sanders doubled down on Thursday on his assertion that his rival for the Democratic Party's nomination, Hillary Clinton, is unqualified to be president as the two campaigns became testy two weeks before New York's election contest.

Clinton, stung by a string of losses, this week sharply questioned Sanders' credentials and ability to carry out a campaign pledge to break up the big banks.

Sanders, a U.S. senator from Vermont, told reporters in Philadelphia that Clinton had come after him in a "really uncalled-for way" and again questioned the Democratic front-runner's own fitness for the Oval Office.

"Are you qualified to be president of the United States when you're raising millions of dollars from Wall Street, an entity whose greed, recklessness and illegal behavior helped destroy our economy?" Sanders said at a news conference.

In what has become an increasing source of acrimony in the Democratic campaign, the former Senator and U.S. Secretary of State Clinton has angrily bristled at Sanders' repeated suggestion that the large amounts of donations she receives from the financial industry clouds her independence, a notion she ridicules. VOTING WITH A VENGEANCE

THE FOREMAN OPINION

TOM FOREMAN

Here's what we learned from the Wisconsin primary: Cheesehead hats are still funny. Packers fans don't just go along to get along, and we are trudging deeply into the wasteland of the Plurality President — a place where the hopes of voters go to die while the major political parties cheer.

What do I mean? There is growing evidence that whoever takes the White House in November will face a country so divided, that he or she will know the vast majority of voters really wanted someone else. The victor will have the most votes, true, but only because mathematically someone has to.

On the Democratic side, Hillary Clinton's supporters have grown positively venomous toward Bernie Sanders' camp and vice versa. Early on, both teams talked about pulling together after the primary, but now they seem like furious family members at a hill wedding gone wrong. They are united only by their opposition to all things Republican, and that may not be enough. The feud is bitter, bruising and it won't easily end.

And what about the GOP? Members of their old guard are gulping heart medicine like M&M's as Donald Trump rumbles through their garden party — turning over the tables at their primaries, throwing chairs into the pool and making the Blue Hairs faint dead away. The alternative, Ted Cruz, is like the neighbor they hate but have to call because the police haven't shown up yet.

Each camp among these front-runners, profoundly dislikes and distrusts all the others. (John Kasich? Yeah, he's just hanging around hoping somehow they'll all go away and leave him in charge.)

So pick your poison. Put Clinton, Trump, Sanders or Cruz into the Oval Office and you have given the job to someone only a quarter of the country actively supports — and three-quarters potentially consider illegitimate. And what do you think any of them can get done in an environment like that? This is the choice the two parties have given us, despite all that frothy talk about wanting an end to partisanship, and to usher in a new age of cooperation in D.C.

Things can change and we don't know who will win in November, but I think we already know who has lost.

The "Sea Hunter" DEFENSE ADVANCED RESEARCH PROJECTS AGENCY

US military christens self-piloting ship

The U.S. military Thursday christened an experimental self-piloting ship designed to hunt for enemy submarines, a major advance in robotic warfare at the core of America's strategy to counter Chinese and Russian naval investments.

The 132-foot-long unarmed prototype, dubbed Sea Hunter, is the naval equivalent of Google's self-driving car, designed to cruise on the ocean's surface for two or three months at a time — without a crew or anyone controlling it remotely.

That kind of endurance and autonomy could make it a highly efficient submarine stalker at a fraction of the cost of the Navy's manned vessels.

"This is an inflection point," Deputy U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Work said in an interview, adding he hoped such ships might find a place in the western Pacific in as few as five years. "This is the first time we've ever had a totally robotic, transoceanic-capable ship."

For Pentagon planners such as Work, the Sea Hunter fits into a strategy to incorporate unmanned drones — with increasing autonomy - into the conventional military in the air, on land and at sea.

It also comes as China's naval investments, including in its expanding submarine fleet, stoke concern in Washington about the vulnerability of the aircraft carrier battle groups and submarines that remain critical to America's military superiority in the western Pacific.

"We're not working on anti-submarine (technology) just because we think it's cool. We're working on it because we're deeply concerned about the advancements that China and Russia are making in this space," said author Peter Singer, an expert on robotic warfare at the New America Foundation think tank.

Work said he hoped the ship, once it is proven safe, could head to the U.S. Navy's Japan-based 7th Fleet to continue testing.

His goal is to have ships like the Sea Hunter operating on a range of missions, possibly even including counter-mine warfare operations.

"I would like to see unmanned flotillas operating in the western Pacific and the Persian Gulf within five years," he said. REUTERS

US orders Amtrak to conduct safety review after accident

A Georgia-bound Amtrak train struck a backhoe on the tracks, killing the backhoe operator and another Amtrak construction worker on foot and sending 35 people to hospital.

The U.S. Federal Railroad Administration on Thursday ordered Amtrak to conduct a safety review after Sunday's passenger train accident near Philadelphia that killed two people.

The accident took place about 20 miles south of where another derailment last May killed eight and injured 43.

The railroad administration and the National Transportation Safety Board are investigating.

In the meantime, the administration directed Amtrak to conduct a "safety stand down" for track maintenance workers, which it described as a comprehensive review of all safety rules with employees.

Amtrak said it was working with the safety board to identify the cause of the accident and vowed to make changes if needed.

"Amtrak has strict protocols that crews must follow when tracks are taken out of service for maintenance or when work is being performed along the right-of-way," spokeswoman Kimberly Woods said in a statement. REUTERS

"Amtrak has a strong safety record. ... However, we need to assess how we can get better."

Kristen Bell plays a single mom tortured by her fallen former employer (Melissa McCarthy) in "The Boss." UNIVERSAL PICTURES

GETTY IMAGES

THE FUN STARTS HERE

The co-star of "The Boss" is glad she hasn't had any terrible employers.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

In "The Boss," Kristen Bell is the straight woman to Melissa McCarthy's outlandish and ridiculous business titan, playing her long-suffering assistant who has to take her in after she falls on hard times. And given that the film has an R rating, being that straight woman means weathering a lot of rather risque commentary from her boss. But the forever "Veronica Mars" star, 35, believes there are worse ways to make a living.

Both you and Melissa have these reputations as being two of the nicest people in Hollywood.
She did not disappoint. My husband [Dax Shepard] worked with her and Ben 15 or 20 years ago in the Groundlings, and they've have known each other since they were babies. I've always secretly been very jealous that he knew Melissa and Ben [Falcone, McCarthy's husband and "The Boss" director].

Do you have anything like that Groundlings clique from early on yourself?
Well, I went to musical theater school. I went to New York University, so the kids that I was in college with, we were just musical theater geeks. That would be my Groundlings clique.

Doing a movie about work, you get a lot of questions about past jobs, terrible bosses. Were any of your retail jobs particularly worse than the others?
Not really. I only had two retail jobs, and I was one of those really lucky people that started working professionally at a really young age. I left college after two-and-a-half years because I booked a Broadway show, so I was very lucky not to have to deal with bad bosses. Not that there aren't bad bosses in creative jobs, but I just haven't experienced any of them.

Clearly it was decided early on that this was going to be rated R, based on the language. How much freedom does that give you on set?
It's brilliant when you have an R movie because you don't have to self-edit. To me, whether it's "Frozen" or "The Boss," the joke is the same. Your instinct to make the joke is the same, but there's always a qualifying [thought] of "What will it be rated? How can I express it?" And it is quite freeing to know that there are no holds barred. It wasn't within my character to swear a lot or to get quite as raunchy, but it is nice that the people around me were able to, because it made it a lot funnier.

You and your husband are noted binge-watchers. What are you currently bingeing?
Currently "Mr. Robot." We really liked the pilot, and the show does not disappoint. For me, there's a "Veronica Mars"-esque quality about it. Maybe it's the underdog, maybe it's the fighting for justice. It's a bizarre show, but I'm really enjoying it. We also just started watching "Getting On," which I'm loving. It's pretty special.

Are there any hard-and-fast rules for spousal binge-watching?
TV binge-watching has to happen together if you're in any sort of couple. Like, I have not seen the new season "House of Cards" yet. Dax watched it without me, which almost broke apart our marriage.

A well-planned 'Catastrophe'

Rob Delaney as "Rob," father of two in season two. AMAZON STUDIOS

Rob Delaney explains the season two time jump.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Rob Delaney stars alongside Irish-English actress Sharon Horgan in the very (very) funny "Catastrophe," whose second season streaming debut drops on Amazon Prime this Friday. The two star as characters that share their names (Rob, of Boston, Sharon, of London) and in the first six-episode season, hook up, get pregnant and fall in love — in that order.

The show's second season, which already aired across the pond on Channel 4, picks up post-first baby for the couple. We chat with Delaney about the concept of soulmates, the season time jump and what it's like having Carrie Fisher play your totally awful mother.

We pick up a few years later with Rob and Sharon in season two — what made you do a time jump? And what did we miss?
What I like about the time jump is that it's up to you — you pick up some clues and some outright statements of fact about what happens in that time. Like they survived and endured and stayed in love, got pregnant again, but nobody got a degree in neuroscience or started an artisanal candle company or anything.

Rob got fatter. They got older. Sharon still dresses cool.

This season Sharon is going through a pretty rough time — postpartum depression, the loneliness of being a stay-at-home mom, her father's dementia — and Rob appears to be very supportive. What do you think makes him a strong partner?
I don't even know if that's true. He loves her and he does the best that he can. He loves the kids that they made together even though they didn't plan for her to get pregnant, but you can tell that he's glad that she did. I believe that both characters wouldn't go back and undo what happened even though it's not easy, even if they're not fundamentally happy with the basic facts of it. If he's the supportive guy, it's because he's loves the life they've made together.

And we get to see more of Carrie Fisher as your terrible mother this season.
Isn't she disgusting and wonderful? I love her so much. [Working with her] is like better than winning the lottery. It's such a dream come true.

Do you think Rob and Sharon are soulmates?
I don't know what that word means, but I think they've chosen to be. They might have been bed mates and then they decided to make it something more. I think that that's romantic, though. I think it's cool when people make a conscious choice to do the work, but soulmates? No, I guess I don't, but only because I know that I don't believe in that word.

The opposites of 'Outlander'

Menzies as Frank Randall — a good guy. SONY PICTURES

Tobias Menzies on the new season and playing two totally different roles.

ALLYSON FLORIDIA
@allysonfloridia
allyson.floridia@metro.us

Season 2 of the Starz's romance-driven period drama "Outlander" premieres April 9 at 9 p.m.

The series (loosely-ish) based on The New York Times' best-selling novels by Diana Gabaldon, follows Claire Randall Fraser (Caitriona Balfe) as she travels through time from 1946 to 1743. She leaves behind husband Frank Randall (Tobias Menzies), but ends up falling in love with Scottish soldier James Fraser (Sam Heughan).

Meanwhile, they also have to dodge Frank's ancestor, Jack Randall (also played by Menzies), the villainous English knight who ends up capturing and horrifically torturing Jamie in the season's final episodes.

The 42-year-old English actor — also known for his roles on "Game of Thrones" and "Rome" — speaks with us about playing two vastly different characters and what's in store for the upcoming season.

What's been your approach playing such opposite characters who also happen to be distantly related? Are they similar at all despite having totally different approaches to life? Jack is brutally sadistic, while Frank remains so loyal and dedicated to Claire.
They're both quite different psychologies. [I've] explored the distinctions between them, but found moments where we've seen Jack in Frank and vice-versa. There's a lot of complexity and shading.

In the broadest terms, they're from different time periods. One is a modern man and the other is a pre-modern man. They've both gone through wars. Jack is the product of the Jacobite war and Frank World War II, [though] they've arguably come to different conclusions. In some ways, Jack abandons a sort of moral code and chooses to express his less rational and less civilized appetites and Frank, despite having similar traumatic experiences, doesn't choose that route. You could argue that he has a remarkable woman in Claire and that's why he's different.

Jack and Jamie interactions are volatile from the very beginning.
He is drawn to Jamie because maybe Jamie is everything that Jack has lost. Jaime has a profound honor to him, a moral compass that is apparently unshakable. That is very enticing and intriguing to Jack. But that interest is with desire to hurt and dismantle him.

What have the fan responses been like to Jack — especially after that scene?
I hope they enjoy the expression of human polarity in the piece. All dramas need that breath of expression. Jack — though sometimes very violent and destructive and hard to watch — he's an antidote to overly sunny, romantic aspects. Nobody wants to see a show where there's wall-to-wall people having fun. We watch drama to see jeopardy and see situations we hope not to experience in our own lives. To that end, I think Jack is a very important ingredient to the show.

Any new faces we should be watching out for in season two?
There's a great new cast. Andrew Gower is playing Prince Charlie. There's a lot to enjoy going into the French court, which is the start of the second season. There's a different feel, fresh blood.

RED SOX BOSS ALREADY LOOKS WISE FOR SPENDING BIG MONEY ON PRICE

It was how Dave Dombrowski drew it up.

The Red Sox' season-opening win over the Cleveland Indians had it all: dominant pitching, timely hitting, and solid defense. So it's fair to say that when Dombrowski, Boston's president of baseball operations, envisioned his 2016 Opening Day lineup, the result that played out in his head looked pretty similar to Tuesday's 6-2 win at Progressive Field.

But there was one thing that jumped off the screen. And that was none other than David Price. His Red Sox debut was a breath of fresh air for an organization that desperately needed a bona fide ace to lead the rotation.

Price picked up the win, allowing two runs on five hits in six innings, while walking two and striking out 10. On top of it all, Price got the job done in 30-degree weather. And in my opinion, he didn't even have his best stuff.

Price's fastball was around 91 mph all day long. Sure, it was 91 with some serious pop, but as the year goes on, you'll see that velocity tickle the mid-90s. And there were certainly moments on Tuesday in which Price struggled with the location of his cutter. That said, he was able to get out of an early jam in the second with back-to-back strikeouts while there were runners on the corners.

And then in the fourth inning, after allowing two runs that tied the game at 2-2, Price was able to minimize the damage with an inning-ending strikeout, keeping the game tied.

He went on to end each of his final two innings — the fifth and the sixth — with a strikeout, and left the game with a 4-2 lead.

Price did his job, and then some. He set the table for his new team's first win of the season, but he also confirmed that Dombrowski made the right decision by signing him to a seven-year, $217 million deal over the winter.

Not that I needed the confirmation. I was on board with a Price signing while he was playing for Toronto last year. Bringing in a dominant ace in free agency — even if it would cost an arm and a leg — made too much sense. And give credit where credit is due to Dombrowski, general manager Mike Hazen and Red Sox ownership for pinpointing the team's biggest need and attacking one of the best available players at that position.

The same goes for new closer Craig Kimbrel. That was also a position of need for the Red Sox. And Dombrowski jumped all over it, landing him in a blockbuster trade this past offseason. Kimbrel did not disappoint in his debut. He pitched a scoreless ninth inning and struck out two, while showcasing his filthy 96-97 mph fastball.

It was a non-save situation, thanks to David Ortiz's ninth-inning, two-run home run. But it didn't matter. Kimbrel's performance was another confirmation — if you needed any — that Dombrowski made the right decision by trading four prospects to San Diego for arguably the best closer in all of baseball.

Combine those Opening Day performances with Mookie Betts' two-run home run and spectacular leaping grab in right field, and you got a nearly perfect way to begin the 2016 season.

But ultimately, Price's statement was the loudest of them all.

Plenty of questions remain with the rest of the Red Sox rotation, for sure. But Price's debut should have given everyone in Boston some sense of relief. Because the Red Sox have somebody they can count on to control the game every fifth night. They have an ace again.

And that's exactly how Dombrowski drew it up.

STRIKE NOW IN FANTASY BASEBALL

Kyle Bishop is a lead MLB columnist at Rotoballer.com, your secret weapon for winning fantasy leagues.

With the news that A.J. Pollock will miss most of the 2016 season with an elbow fracture, many fantasy owners have been dealt the first significant blow to their roster. Here are four replacement options who are owned in less than 50 percent of Yahoo leagues.

Steven Souza could easily blast 20 homers and swipe 20 bases this season. GETTY IMAGES

Steven Souza

(48 percent owned)
Souza is a fairly substantial liability in batting average – he hit only .225 a season ago thanks to a gargantuan whiff rate. However, he is also likely the only player available on the wire in your league who is a good bet to hit 20 homers and steal 20 bases. If you play in a league that uses on-base percentage instead of batting average, Souza is a much more valuable asset.

Marcell Ozuna

Ozuna was a popular sleeper in drafts last season after totaling 23 homers and 85 RBI in 2014. Unfortunately for those who targeted him, Ozuna stumbled out of the gate and earned a demotion to the minors, ultimately resulting in a lost season. He hit much better in the second half, however, and the Marlins resisted the urge to sell low on him this winter. Now he appears to be Don Mattingly's choice to hit second in the order.

Domingo Santana

(39 percent)
Santana's Major League career didn't get off to the most auspicious start. In a blink-and-you-missed-it cup of coffee in 2014, he struck out in 14 of 18 trips to the plate. Last season, though, he managed eight homers and four steals in only 160 at-bats. The bulk of that production came after he was traded from Houston to Milwaukee as part of the package for Carlos Gomez. Santana not only has a clear path to playing time with the non-contending Brewers, he's currently got a grip of the leadoff spot. If he can stick there all season, 30 homers isn't a crazy thought, along with plenty of runs and double-digit stolen bases.

Socrates Brito

(9 percent)
We conclude with the man who will replace Pollock himself in the Arizona outfield. Brito had already been drawing some attention in deep and NL-only leagues before the injury; he averaged 10 homers and 30 steals in the minors the past two seasons. Of course, that was at High-A and Double-A, but Brito has the tools to succeed at the big-league level. With Pollock out for potentially all of 2016, Brito will be given the opportunity to run with the center field job. He hit second in the lineup on Tuesday, ahead of Paul Goldschmidt and David Peralta. If he can hit well enough to stick there, runs should come in bunches.

Aries Take a moment to consider all your options. Impatience will lead to mistakes and add to your stress. Concentrate on what you can do, not on what others are doing.

Taurus If you use your charm, you will convince others to pitch in and help. By offering a little incentive, you will not only reach your goal, but you will become a popular leader.

Gemini Keep a close watch over your personal affairs. Don't rely on anyone to take care of your responsibilities. An update to your appearance will improve your personal life.

Cancer You'll capture someone's interest with your down-to-earth approach. A proposal or partnership will develop, helping you determine your next move.

Leo Your generosity will attract hangers-on. Be careful not to end up in debt trying to impress someone. Look inward and make personal changes that will promote confidence.

Virgo Discussion will be your fastest route to getting what you want. The information you acquire will enable you to embark on an enterprising venture and a promising future.

Libra Keep the peace. A change may be necessary, but only when you are ready to launch your well-thought-out plans. Romance will ease your stress.

Scorpio Bounce your ideas and plans off a friend or simpatico co-worker. The input you get will make whatever task you face more enjoyable and entertaining.

Sagittarius Explore avenues that show promise. It's OK to make changes that suit your needs. You can't always do what is best for others at your expense.

Capricorn Don't let confusion set in. If there is something you don't understand, ask questions and find out what you need. An emotional plea will help you win someone's approval.

Aquarius Emotions will be difficult to control if someone isn't supportive or helpful. Try to be patient, but put an alternative plan in motion to counter a setback.

Pisces Avoid traveling or dealing with institutions or people who could make your life difficult. An old friend will give you a new lease on life. EUGENIA LAST
